An Oregon man was arrested last month after Transportation Security Administration employees saw him trying to hide his loaded gun in a planter box so he could retrieve it upon his return. Romney Booed at NAACP Event

Criticism of Obama draws rebukes from a skeptical audience

Houston

Unflinching before a skeptical NAACP crowd, Mitt Romney declared Wednesday he'd do more for African-Americans than Barack Obama, the nation's first black president. He drew jeers when he lambasted the Democrat's policies.

"If you want a president who will make things better in the African-American community, you are looking at him," Romney told the group's annual convention. Pausing as some in the crowd heckled, he added, "You take a look!"

"For real?" yelled someone in the crowd.

The reception was occasionally rocky though generally polite as the Republican presidential candidate sought to woo a Democratic

At other points, Romney earned scattered clapping for his promises to create jobs and improve education.

The president of Florida A&M University submitted his resignation Wednesday, the same day the university was sued by parents of a drum major who died during a hazing. It was unclear whether the two events were related.

No Politicians Allowed At 9/11 Anniversary in N.Y.

New York

Politicians will be excluded from speaking at this year's Sept. 11 anniversary ceremony at ground zero, following a year in which families have expressed concern that political struggles are hindering progress on a 9/11 museum at the World Trade Center site.

The foundation that controls the 9/11 memorial told family members that this year the reading of victims' names by relatives will be "the exclusive focus of the program," according to a letter sent to families Wednesday.

It was the first indication that the reading of the names would continue to be part of the ceremony as the 11th anniversary approaches. Some family members had protested after New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, the foundation's chair, had said he wasn't sure whether names should be read now that they are already on display.

Disagreements over the site have intensified in recent weeks, with some accusing New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo and New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie of betraying the dead, and others accusing Bloomberg and the foundation of blocking progress and allowing costs to increase. Many family members have expressed concern that the site is sliding back into political dysfunction. SAMANTHA GROSS (AP)

Liberals Hold Edge in Libya Vote

Partial results show Islamists unlikely to dominate parliament

Tripoli, Libya

Liberal parties held a lead Wednesday in partial results from Libya's first parliamentary election, on the same day that Mustafa Abdul-Jalil, the head of the interim government, stated his country would not be ruled by Islamists.

Up to now, Islamists have taken dominant roles in countries that experienced Arab Spring revolts, such as Egypt and Tunisia.

The overthrow of longtime ruler Moammar Gadhafi left Libya without a cohesive regime. Gadhafi, who "What happened in Libya was a miracle. People's choices of the assembly are excellent and nationalist."

AS BALLOT COUNTING IS STILL ONGOING.

According to the official results, the liberal alliance finished far ahead of the Muslim Brotherhood's Justice and Construction Party in the eastern city of Benghazi, the country's second largest and the birthplace of the uprising. It also beat out Islamist parties in western cities as far away as the country's border with Tunisia.

Some 2.7 million Libyans, making up more than 60 percent of eligible voters, cast their ballots for the first time in more than five decades on Saturday in the first nationwide vote since the downfall of Gadhafi.

Assessing the partial election totals, Abdul-Jalil said Islamists would play a role in the country's politics, but Libya would not follow in the footsteps of its neighbors, where Islamist parties won power in elections after uprisings last year. MAGGIE MICHAEL (AP)

Russian Parliament OKs Law to Censor Internet

Moscow

The Russian parliament passed a hastily introduced law Wednesday that allows the government to impose limits on the Internet, prompting fears it could prove a first step toward censorship of a previously unbridled forum.

The law, presented as a way to protect children by eliminating websites devoted to child pornography, pedophilia, illegal drug use and suicide, won broad support in the Duma, the lower house, where 441 of 450 members voted for it.

Bloggers, media groups and rights defenders opposed it, feared it was not well thought out — it was introduced only last week — and could be loosely interpreted.

Russia Cracks Down

Last month, the Russian parliament's lower house passed a law drastically raising fines for those who violate the rules for holding a protest. On Wednesday, it advanced a bill that would make slander a criminal offense. It is expected to pass a law this week requiring nongovernmental organizations that get money from abroad to register as foreign agents. (TWP)

Opposition groups, who have relied on the Internet to rally support, called it part of a broad assault on them. "Many of us are now in danger," said blogger Oleg Kozyrev.

After Heiress' Death, Speculation

Socialite, husband had long battle with addiction in Britain

London

When Eva Rausing approached the U.S. Embassy in London's Grosvenor Square four years ago to deal with a routine passport matter, she had to pass through British security, then face a metal detector.

The wealthy American tried to clear security with small amounts of crack cocaine, heroin and a banned stimulant in her purse.

Her arrest led police to search the multimillion-dollar property she shared with her husband, Tetra Pak heir Hans Kristian Rausing. Police found more drugs.

It made public what close family and friends already knew: The golden couple were mired in drug addiction even as they gave millions to anti-addiction charities.

Their sad tale reached its climax this week when Rausing, 48, was found dead in their home and her husband arrested for questioning and placed in hospital care. The cause of death has not yet been established.

Before the arrest, Rausing's good looks, along with her husband and his friendly countenance, had made the couple welcome participants on the London philanthropic scene. She was on several charity boards, focusing on those that helped fight drug addiction.

Evidence suggests Rausing's drug use intensified after her arrest. Recent photographs showed that Rausing had become gaunt, and her once-stocky husband appeared thin and furtive, bearing slight resemblance to his former self. (AP)

Gray Urged to Quit

Council members call for mayor to step down over campaign scandal

Washington

Three D.C. Council members on Wednesday called on Mayor Vincent Gray to step down after a guilty plea by a third associate as part of the ongoing federal investigation of his 2010 mayoral campaign.

David Catania, I-At Large; Muriel Bowser, D-Ward 4; and Mary Cheh, D-Ward 3, became the first elected officials to call outright for his resignation.

"The people you chose to surround yourself with engaged in a criminal conspiracy to undermine the election process in this city, which means as the leader of that campaign, you forfeit the fruits of that effort," Catania said.

A growing number of people asked Gray to explain what he knew about an apparently secret $653,000 effort to help him get elected. Public relations consultant Jeanne Clarke Harris admitted as part of a plea deal Tuesday that she helped disburse and conceal funds spent by businessman Jeffrey E. Thompson, a prominent city contractor, to evade campaign contribution limits.

Federal prosecutors have not accused Gray, who has denied any wrongdoing.

But Catania added that it was immaterial whether Gray knew about the other campaign. "Does any reasonable person believe that discrediting Fenty.

At a regularly scheduled news conference Wednesday, Gray expressed concern about revelations of a secret fund to aid his election in 2010, but said he is still the best person to lead the city.

"This is not the campaign that we intended to run," Gray told reporters, a day after Harris made her admission in court.

He declined to answer specific questions about the allegations of a vast "shadow campaign" at work for his election two years ago, citing the ongoing federal investigation.

Shady Dealings?

Prosecutors say Vincent Gray's mayoral campaign benefited from a secret fund of $653,000. The money bought about 10,000 yard signs, 6,500 T-shirts and 200 umbrellas in addition to banners, stickers, posters, consultants, canvassers, computers, radios and a public-address system. Many items had logos and designs identical to Gray's official campaign materials, and many — "if not all" — of the items were delivered to Gray's headquarters. (AP) his full term, which ends in January 2015, Gray said, "I have no plans to do otherwise."

On Tuesday, U.S. Attorney Ronald Machen Jr., the city's top federal prosecutor, described a secret $653,000 election effort that was not reported to campaign-finance authorities or disclosed to the public.

Machen decried political corruption in the city, saying the mayoral race was "compromised by backroom deals, secret payments and a flood of unreported cash."

Prosecutors did not allege that Gray had knowledge of the "shadow campaign," but they said the effort was coordinated with members of his campaign.

Tuesday's revelations greatly expanded concerns — first raised by minor mayoral candidate Sulaimon Brown — that the city's 2010 mayoral election was corrupted by illicit payoffs.

Gray won the September 2010 primary by nearly 10 percentage points — 13,000 votes. His vote total was boosted in part by a better-than-expected turnout east of the Anacostia River, where Gray campaign workers have said the "shadow campaign" was focused.

Metro board's safety and security committee are briefed.

Both incidents came during a period of oppressively hot weather, and Metro spokesman Dan Stessel said high temperatures likely caused three cars on a Green Line train to derail Friday afternoon near the West Hyattsville station.

After baking in 99-degree weather, a portion of the track apparently buckled. It took Prince George's rescue workers about an hour to clear the train and lead the 55 passengers through a nearby tunnel and out a ventilation shaft that serves as an emergency exit.

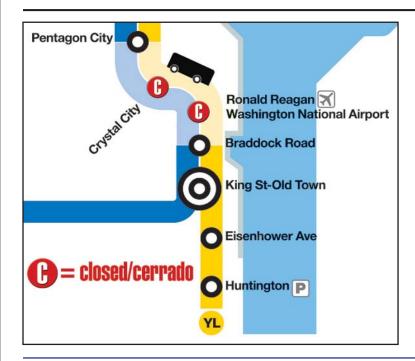

But since announcing Saturday that heat was the probable cause of the derailment, Metro has refused to provide additional details, including when the stretch of track was last inspected.

The Tri-State Oversight Committee, which investigates Metro accidents, is looking into both Green Line incidents. But the committee said that Metro, which is typically required to submit preliminary reports within three days, had been granted an extension until Thursday.

Friday's derailment was the second time in three months that one of Metro's trains jumped the track with passengers aboard. In April, an outbound Blue Line train derailed at Rosslyn. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

911 Failure Affected 2.3M in NoVa

Residents were sans emergency telephone service for many days

Arlington

About 2.3 million Northern Virginia residents were without emergency 911 telephone service for several days last week after a backup generator failed following severe thunderstorms in the region, a senior Verizon official told government leaders Wednesday.

The outage, which prevented hundreds, perhaps thousands, of calls for help from getting through to emergency responders, was among the worst public safety fallouts from the June 29 storm that charged through the Washington area and cut power to a million residents, businesses and governments from Fairfax County to Manassas Park.

"This region expects better," said Prince William County Supervisor Frank J. Principi, D-Woodbridge, who is chair of the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments.

Speaking at the council's board meeting, he added: "What is particularly concerning to me is it's not the first time this has happened."

The 911 failure, of which the

"911 is the most recognized number in America. ... It absolutely must work flawlessly."

— STEVE SOUDER, DIRECTOR OF FAIRFAX COUNTY'S EMERGENCY SERVICES OPERATIONS CENTER

generator failure was only one factor, began hours after the severe derecho thunderstorm passed through the region about 10:30 p.m. June 29.

The storm damaged "multiple points" of Verizon's network, said Kyle Malady, Verizon's senior vice president for global network engineering and operations.

"The magnitude of this event cannot be overstated," he said, adding that it exceeded damage caused by Hurricane Irene.

When commercial power failed, the Arlington County hub for Northern Virginia's 911 service failed, and the facility reverted to a battery backup. Twin diesel-powered generators are supposed to quickly kick in, but one of the two generators could not be started, Malady said.

Both generators had undergone routine testing three days earlier. PATRICIA SULLIVAN (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Since CNBC's special report "America's Top States for Business" started in 2007, Virginia has been among the top-ranked states, never falling below second.

This year, Virginia lost its first-place title to Texas, struggling in the Infrastructure & Transportation and Cost of Doing Business categories. The study scores all 50 states on 51 measures of competitiveness developed with input from business groups including the National Association of Manufacturers and the Council on Competitiveness, as well as input from the states.

Further down the list is Maryland, dropping from last year's 29th place to 31st. Like Virginia, Maryland ranks low in the Infrastructure & Transportation and Cost of Doing Business categories as well as Cost of Living. MALU BANUELOS (THE WASHINGTON POST)

RHAPSODY IN BLUE

At Hillwood Estate. Museum & Gardens, the 19th-century Russian painting "Portrait of Countess Samoilova" inspired Belgian artist de Borchgrave to whip up a frock mimicking the one the subject wore. Every detail —the lace collar, the jeweled belt—is formed of painted, embellished paper.

"I love to do accessories in paper, but they're harder than dresses," de Borchgrave says. "And making a pair of shoes is difficult." This black ballerina style boasts a dramatic red "ribbon."

Using paper and paint, artist Isabelle de Borchgrave conjures fashion's glam past

Exhibits

Most designers setting out to create a ball gown start with paper — to sketch a concept or make a pattern. Belgian artist Isabelle de Borchgrave doesn't stop there. For the past two decades, de Borchgrave has used her painter's aesthetic to form just-larger-than-life clothing from ordinary paper.

"I play with a brush and paper; eventually it becomes this big thing," she says. More than 25 of the artist's fashion-meets-fantasy works are scattered throughout Hillwood Estate, Museum & Gardens through the end of the year as part of "Pret-à-Papier: The Exquisite Art of Isabelle de Borchgrave."

Hillwood, the feminine, Russianand French-art-filled final home of cereal heiress/art collector Marjorie Merriweather Post, proves an ideal showcase for de Borchgrave's pretty, tactile creations. After all, the crumpling, brush-stroking and pleating the artist and her atelier do to create the faux frocks, shoes and menswear are as much a fine craft as the techniques used to make Post's stash of Fabergé eggs, Flemish tapestries and carved Parisian chairs.

"We never count the hours it takes to do a dress," says de Borchgrave, but it's a minimum of a month-and-a-half's work for several people to conjure up pieces like the ones headlining at Hillwood.

The fashionable works, most with a historical bent, are strewn

Other frock stars summon Marie Antoinette (a pink, ruffled concoction with punched paper "lace") and the flapper era ("Boardwalk Empire"-worthy gowns in red and black). Menswear is represented, too, in a French-style frock coat in blue and yellow.

"We draw on a large library of books and research," says the artist. "I look at history and paintings, and then I exaggerate a little bit, make things bigger or bolder. But it's not Mickey Mouse — it's serious. I give people a tableaux, a dream."

Minimalist Reflections

Abstract painter Barnett Newman's 'Stations of the Cross' continues to intrigue

Exhibits

Many viewers were surprised when abstract impressionist painter Barnett Newman first showed his "The Stations of the Cross: Lema Sabachthani" series at New York's Guggenheim Museum in 1966. The 14-painting cycle, now on display in the National Gallery of Art's Tower Gallery, even struck some as "ridiculous," says Harry Cooper, the NGA's curator of modern and contemporary art.

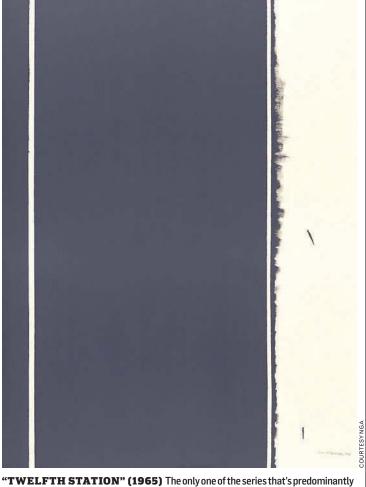

Newman's minimalist paintings are rendered in white, black and gray, often with expanses of raw canvas as a fourth "color." Each features two vertical lines that Newman, who died in 1970, called "zips." How could these works depict Jesus' route to the crucifixion? (And wasn't Newman Jewish, anyway?)

"He tried to discourage the idea that each painting was one of the stations," Cooper says. Rather, the cycle, painted between 1958 and 1966, was meant to express the anguish of Jesus' question: "Why have you forsaken me?" Newman was a "not-very-observant Jew" who wanted the series "to be about the question of God, especially in a post-Holocaust context," Cooper says.

Like other 20th-century painters, Newman was "trying somehow to broach great, tragic subjects with just abstract means," Cooper says. But the artist's work is today prized more for its elegance and luminosity.

"Newman talked about the paintings in terms of light," Cooper says. "Creating light out of these very simple means."

gray, this piece was mostly black until artist Barnett Newman overpainted the original. The line on the right is a rare loose element that breaks from his hard-edged style. The painting is simple, says curator Harry Cooper, "but it has the drama of that rough edge."

"[Newman was] trying somehow to broach great, tragic subjects with just abstract means."

— HARRY COOPER, CURATOR OF MOD-ERN AND CONTEMPORARY ART FOR THE NATIONAL GALLERY, ON NEWMAN'S WORK

That's one of the reasons Cooper selected "The Stations," supplemented by other Newman works, for the museum's intimate, daylight-rich Tower Gallery. "The Stations" and most of the other pieces are owned by the NGA, but they have not been presented like this before.

"The works have a lot of drama in themselves, with those zips like lightning bolts," Cooper says. "Then there's the drama of seeing them up there, in all that light."

Cinematic Soundtrack

French-Chilean rapper Ana Tijoux composes a new record full of vivid, moving imagery

Music

Inside French-Chilean rapper Ana Tijoux's mind is a constantly unfolding film.

"I'm super fond of DVD commentaries," she says, explaining the inspiration for her latest disc, "La Bala." "So, I imagined this album almost like a tragic movie. I was imagining everything as scene one, scene two, scene three."

Spitting Spanish-language verses in a Chilean lilt, Tijoux not only

Many of Ana Tijoux's songs deal with recent political unrest in Chile.

narrates stories of tragedy, violence and dissent but also comments on them as they unfold — a tricky toggle between perspectives.

Take the title track, a grim account of a murder.

"The first verse talks about this bullet arriving to this guy who's going to die — and, boom!" Tijoux says. "During the chorus, the dead are dancing around him and laughing. The second verse is the mother finding the body of her son on the floor, and she's crying and screaming. The dead are super afraid of her. I was imagining them as a Greek chorus."

Of course, listeners who don't speak Spanish are unlikely to pick up on the subtleties or meanings of her lyrics, but that hasn't stopped the trilingual rapper from finding audiences all over the world. Tijoux — who was born in France after her parents fled Augusto Pinochet's dictatorship of Chile in the 1970s — has toured the U.S. several times and received a Grammy nomination for her previous album, "1977."

Even as she becomes a global figure, Tijoux remains rooted in Chile — so much so that "La Bala" serves as a commentary track on the state of the nation during the ongoing student protests that began in May 2011. She recorded the album in the capital city of Santiago as young students took to the streets to decry decreases in education funding.

"My country is very small and it's at the end of the world," she says. "So, all these protests were like the waking of an entire country. It's not only about students now. It's about everybody asking questions."

Still, Tijoux doesn't see herself as an especially political artist, just someone who's engaged with her surroundings. "I've got a lot of questions, and I feel like the music allows me to reflect on what's going on."

David Kaley

COSTUME DESIGNER

The Addams Family came to life as characters in cartoons in the New Yorker magazine, penned by macabre genius Charles Addams. The kooky clan, immortalized on TV and in movies, also has the ultimate mark of fame: a Broadway musical. With "The Addams Family" in town for a short run at the Kennedy Center, associate costume designer David Kaley discussed the family's look and Morticia's dress.

What did you look at when you started designing the costumes?

This production came out of the cartoons from the New Yorker. We didn't want it to feel like the movie[s]. We didn't want it to feel like the TV show. We really wanted to go back to the source material.

How did you get the cartoon look?

There's a hand-painted quality to a lot of the clothes. There's a hand-drawn feel we try to incorporate. The clothes are painted or dyed or embroidered so they feel more like the drawings.

Was it hard to redesign something so familiar to so many people?

The look for the family is so iconic. We felt a responsibility to make sure that when the lights come up, you know exactly who they are.

How hard is it, exactly, for Morticia to walk in that dress?

It's not as tricky as you might think, but it takes a little theatrical magic and a lot of coordination and talent on the part of our Morticia. But I've never seen a Morticia go down.

Essence of the Beach

Richard Diebenkorn's abstract canvases evoke California dreaming with no palm trees in sight

Exhibits

The works in "Richard Diebenkorn: The Ocean Park Series," on view through Sept. 23 at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, are not exactly representational. The series is named for a Santa Monica neighborhood, though, and its imagery hints at what might be seen there: surf, turf and sky.

"The paintings certainly evoke landscapes," says Philip Brookman, the Corcoran's coordinating curator for the exhibition. "But Diebenkorn was very clear

"Even in his most abstract images, you still get a sense of the light in Southern California."

CURATOR FOR THE CORCORAN GALLERY OF
ART'S "RICHARD DIEBENKORN: THE OCEAN PARK SERIES," A COLLECTION OF BEACH-INSPIRED,

that the paintings are abstraction."

While New York's abstract expressionists rejected representation, the Oregon-born, California-based Diebenkorn started out as a figurative painter. The artist, who lived from 1922 to 1993, moved toward a style that emphasized gridded compositions as well as bands and blocks of rich, layered color. But he never lost his sense of place.

Diebenkorn's art is clearly West Coast, Brookman says. "Even in his most abstract images, you still get a sense of the light in Southern California."

 $\label{linear park properties} \textbf{Diebenkorn's "Ocean Park \#79" suggests water and a beach sunset.}$

Spotlight

"Ocean Park #83" has been in the Corcoran's collection since 1975, the year it was painted. Brookman calls it "one of the most beautiful abstractions I know, a kind of symphony of color that evokes a Southern California suburban landscape." The curator likes the way the painting reveals its depths and Diebenkorn's technique. "He allows the viewer to see into the painting, through many layers. He leaves a lot of clues as to what he's done before." M.J.

The artist's canvases can be found in most museums with significant holdings of modern American art. But his drawings and prints are seen less often. This show includes them, demonstrating the breadth of the "Ocean Park" works, which occupied the artist from 1967 to 1988.

"I don't know of another show that combined paintings, drawings and prints exclusively from the 'Ocean Park' series," Brookman says. "That's what's unique about this show."

The works on paper are "more accessible" and offer "a simpler view of his work," adds the curator, who organized a show of Diebenkorn drawings while still an undergraduate at the University of California, Santa Cruz in 1973.

Diebenkorn's style reflects the influence of Picasso and Matisse and his own experiences viewing this country's agricultural patchwork from the air.

"He's taking in all the things he sees, in a very personal way," Brookman says of "Ocean Park." The result, he concludes, is nothing less than "one of the high points of American painting."

The 2012 Capital Fringe Festival kicks off

Thursday, with all its theatrical insanity running through July 29. Fringe brings together dozens of small theater groups from all over the country to perform in makeshift spaces around the city. Tickets are cheap ($17, plus a $5-$7 Fringe button, see below), and the shows, while a mixed bag, have a homegrown vitality that can be hard to find at more polished D.C. theaters.

Kickstarter, a website where artists, activists and others can solicit donations for projects, is a natural fit for the festival, and Fringe HQ estimates that 30 to 50 of this year's 134 plays were funded through the site. 'In This Economy'

John Krizel's play, which follows a young man in his aimless postcollege phase whose new girlfriend encourages him to get his life together, may be a little bit based on his own life. This is Krizel's first Fringe show. "I wrote this play in my bedroom and just sent it in to Fringe on a whim," he says. "They accepted it, and I was like, 'This is great! And now I have to spend all this money that I don't have." But then, through Kickstarter (which he used, he says, "because I am very poor"), he raised more than double his $1,200 goal. Fringe Benefits for weekend Fringe-going!

LINDSEY TURNER (FOR EXPRESS)

• 'D.C. Trash' This newspaper might be the place to read dirt on Washington politicos, but an even more intimate view of the District's underbelly lies with Tenleytown Trash. Written and performed by real-life garbage-truck driver Ron Litman, "D.C. Trash" looks at our city's debris, both figurative and literal. Litman grew up working at his parents' Wisconsin Avenue deli but split for showbiz in New York and L.A. He returns for Fringe to present this play, which even features a character modeled on everyone's favorite trashy D.C. celebrity, ex-"Real Housewife" Michaele Salahi. Fort Fringe Bedroom, 612 L St. NW; Thu., 8:45 p.m., & Sat., 1:45 p.m., $17 plus Fringe button; Capfringe.org. (Mt. Vernon Square)

The Hair Chronicles'

Comb through the kinks in both black tresses and selfhood with "The Hair Chronicles," which features a charming, all-female cast. A grad-school project united the play's three writers — African-American Michelle Whittaker, mixedrace Nileah Bell and African Mary Nyingi — around their shared hair heritage. The play, which premiered at the D.C. Black Theatre Festival last month, delves deep into racial identity and the social weight of something as simple (and complex) as hair when it diverges from a mainstream aesthetic. Goethe-Institut. 812 7th St. NW: Sat., 8:30 p.m., & Sun., 1:30 p.m., $17 plus Fringe button; Capfringe.org. (Gallery Place)

What Is a Fringe Button? It's an actual, physical button. You know, the kind that really jazzes up an outfit. (That's one at left.) Everyone who attends Fringe needs to pick one up in addition to tickets (you show it at the door), but it's a one-time purchase. Special bonus: You can also show it at such local businesses as Ping Pong Dim Sum or Nellie's during Fringe to get nifty discounts.

Naughty Nature

In "ICE AGE: CONTINENTAL

DRIFT," out Friday, the reunited prehistoric beasts are set adrift on an iceberg and try to pretend they all won't be extinct soon. When it comes to movies about survival in the face of environmental change, this is just the tip of the you-know-what. K.P.K.

1 The Day After Tomorrow (2004)

Global warming gets tired of the doubters and slaps the entire planet right across the face, leaving Jake Gyllenhaal trapped in New York. The city never sleeps, but it certainly freezes.

2 An Inconvenient Truth (2006)

The documentary won two Oscars (one for Best Original Song, weirdly) and made movie stars of both Al Gore and PowerPoint.

3 2012 (2009)

The Mayans were right and John Cusack knows it in this action film. Earthquakes lead to mega tsunamis, but at least everyone on the planet now owns waterfront property.

4 Waterworld (1995)

In the not-too-distant future, the ice caps have melted, leading to the death of all the polar bears (noooo!) and the evolution of gill-sporting humans (yesss?).

5 Deep Impact (1998)

It's the same old story: Asteroid meets planet, asteroid destroys planet. And if you don't consider "asteroid" an environmental danger, there are some bones at the National Museum of Natural History that would disagree.

Major League Conflict

'Ballplayer: Pelotero' slams MLB over its scouting tactics in the Dominican Republic

Screen

"If you were 12 and your parents told you you could either play baseball all day, every day, and maybe make millions of dollars, or go to school, what would you do?"

The question, from Trevor Martin, one of the directors of the new documentary "Ballplayer: Pelotero," isn't necessarily rhetorical. That's the choice presented to many preteens in the Dominican Republic, where Martin and co-directors Ross Finkel and Jonathan Paley spent nine months filming kids with dreams of playing in America's big leagues. Major League Baseball, for its part, dreams of finding cheap, young talent. Cheaply.

Dominican kids can be offered professional contracts at age 16 (though few are). Players who aren't signed by 17 are considered washed up and their market value drops precipitously, the movie suggests.

"MLB [says] it's 16, and 16 it is," Martin says. "When you offer big bonuses to a very small amount of kids who happen to play like professionals and have the bodies to play like grown men, it gives you a perverted reason to go to the normal kids who develop at a normal rate and say, 'You weren't ready at 16, so now you're worth $10,000 instead of $2 million.'"

The film, opening locally Friday, follows two Dominican phenoms, Miguel Angel Sano and Jean Carlos Batista, who are at that crucial age — or are they? Because 16 is the magic number, the temptation to lie about a player's age is strong, and accusations of fraud from MLB are not uncommon. When a player can't prove he is who he says he is — which isn't so easy in a country where public records can be sketchy — he's slapped with a one-year ban on playing for MLB. So, his price drops. "It's definitely a cynical business strategy," Martin says.

The film emphasizes that Sano and Batista are each the best hope for their impoverished families, a situation that's all too common in the Dominican Republic.

"We met kids down there whose parents encouraged them to drop out of school and play baseball. Their parents had a sitdown with them and said, 'Well, son, you can either go to school and be a motorcycle taxi driver or cut cane, or you can play baseball and maybe win the lottery."

Did It Just Get Hotter Out Here?

The granddaddy of all D.C. outdoor film fests, Screen on the Green, returns this year for its 14th season of sprawling out on America's biggest lawn: the National Mall. The series begins Monday with the 1969 Western "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid." The classic earned its place in film history as the only movie to successfully combine train robberies, cowboy hats and the music of Burt Bacharach. Paul Newman and Robert Redford ruggedly star in the real-life story of outlaws on the run from a sheriff's posse. Truly, there is nothing hunkier than handsome cowboys who deliver snappy one-liners and are handy with guns. Produced between 1967 and 1988, the Ocean Park series evokes abstract landscape and architectural forms as well as the sense of place that defined the California coast during this time. The Corcoran is the only East Coast venue for this major museum exhibition—the first to focus on the artist's most celebrated body of work.

Training Wheels Are Off

Popular food trucks make themselves at home in permanent locations around D.C.

When the PORC food truck rolled out onto the streets of D.C. in January 2011 with a menu focused on barbecue sandwiches, it was a fast success. Sales were strong and fans were dedicated. But there were drawbacks: no booze, no seating and, of course, no permanent location.

Those issues were resolved last month when co-owners Josh Saltzman, Trent Allen and a few partners opened a restaurant in Columbia Heights called Kangaroo Boxing Club. Though the name

"We always wanted a brick-and-mortar location. The whole intent of the truck was to build up enough capital."

- JOSH SALTZMAN, CO-OWNER OF THE PORC TRUCK AND KANGAROO BOXING CLUB

(inspired by an inside joke among the owners) is different, the menu includes some of PORC's signature dishes, as well as more appetizers, entrees and a full bar.

"It's the things you can't logistically pull off in a two-hour period inside a 6-by-10 metal box," Saltzman says.

He's not the only mobile proprietor to have sought a fixed address. Local food truck owners are increasingly using wheeled start-ups as a way to test concepts with the public, perfect recipes and create buzz. During these tough economic times, money or a lack of it — often is the driving reason why entrepreneurs start out with wheels.

"We always wanted a brick-andmortar location," Saltzman says.

locations in Arlington, left, and D.C. At both restaurants, customers can order the truck's tacos and burritos, as well as new items such as quesadillas and ceviche.

Kangaroo Boxing Club, left and above, expands on the PORC food truck's menu of barbecue sandwiches and comforting sides. It opened in June.

"The whole intent of the truck was to build up enough capital and get our brand out there."

Kangaroo Boxing Club was financed in part by PORC's profits and promoted to its fans via social media. Both elements were key to getting it opened — and packed its first weekend without spending any advertising dollars.

That story probably sounds a little familiar to District Taco owners Marc Wallace and Osiris Hoil. They'd wanted to open a Mexican restaurant in 2009 but lacked the financing. Instead, they started a food cart — "a cheaper way to make the dream happen," Wallace says.

The concept was a hit, giving the partners enough money to finally open a restaurant in Arlington in late 2010 and another in D.C. this May. (Wallace won't ever get rid of the cart, however. When he's not parking it in long-favored hot spots, he uses it as a research drone with which to scout other neighborhoods for future restaurants.)

Similar goals propelled Pleasant Pops, which rolled out its first mobile eatery in July 2010, selling ice pops inspired by Mexi-street treats called "paletas."

"We got to see a lot of different neighborhoods, meet a bunch of people, get our brand out there and tell people our story," says communications director AnneMarie Ashburn. "It also allowed us to establish relationships with the farmers and suppliers who provide our ingredients."

Those connections turned out to be key, since Pleasant Pops crowd-sourced some of the money for its first fixed location through the fundraising platform Kickstart er.com. Ultimately, Pleasant Pops raised more than $26,000 from more than 400 donors, who will be thanked in writing on the wall of the Pleasant Pops Farmhouse Market &

Cafe, which is aiming to open by late August in Adams Morgan.

A month after that, Far East Taco Grille — a food truck since September 2011 — hopes to open its first grab 'n' go eatery on 15th Street NE. For owner Alex Cho, the move made financial sense, as he was renting space in another restaurant to prepare food. The new space will serve as both his prep kitchen and a new revenue stream, even as his truck continues curbside service.

All of the owners agree that there are pros and cons to each sort of setup. Wallace boils down the differences: "Trucks are a lot sexier than a brick-and-mortar. But a brick-andmortar is better at making money." PB & What?!

I almost wimped out when I ordered lunch two weeks ago from the Peanut Butter Jelly Time food truck (PBJ truckdc.com, which, unlike the other food vendors on this page, is a wheelsonly operation). Fully aware that the menu included oddball options, I still spent a long time agonizing over whether to order a daring yet unappetizingsounding sandwich, such as the "PBJBLT" ($5; peanut butter, bacon, lettuce, tomato and red pepper jelly), or the very safe "Classic" ($3, or $5 for two; peanut butter and grape jelly). But I came to my senses and realized it would be ridiculous to pay even $3 for something I could make at home. Time to be bold! So I ordered the "Spicy Pig" ($6).

Before I tell you what's in it, let me just say that, somehow, it tasted great. Here's what sat between the two slices of wheat bread: creamy peanut butter, red pepper jelly, spicy Sambal (an Asian condiment made with chili), prosciutto, bacon, potato chips and apple slices. The blend of the Sambal, pepper jelly and peanut butter anchored the sandwich with a fiery, nutty base of flavor that complemented the sweet and salty stuff. Getting a taste of everything in a single bite reminded me of Thai food — which I love. There's also a good mix of textures: crunchy apple and chips, chewy bacon, delicate prosciutto, gooey peanut butter.

All right, I know this sounds (and looks) like the work of a kindergartner. I only said it tasted good. I never said it was pretty.

Olympics

Less than three weeks before the start of the 2012 Olympics, British officials and athletes around the globe are bracing for a dark threat to the London Games: English weather.

In a city universally besmirched as climatically challenged and about which Jane Austen once wrote, "In London, it is always a sickly season," early Olympic forecasts are cloudy, with a chance of chaos. As Britain copes with what is so far the wettest summer since records began in 1910, meteorological "war rooms" are being set up at the Olympic Park in East London as well as in other British host cities including Eton and Weymouth.

Suggesting scenes of mud-caked Olympians ahead, torrential down-pours have already wreaked havoc at recent British sporting events, including massive disruptions that turned at least 10,000 spectators away from the Formula 1 race at Silverstone last week.

In June, areas across the nation saw

"I remember being in Vancouver for the Winter Games, and as they said then, there is no such thing as bad weather, just bad clothing. Look, if it rains, just bring an umbrella."

— DEBBIE JEVANS, DIRECTOR OF SPORT FOR THE LONDON ORGANIZING COMMITTEE, INSISTING ATHLETES SHOULD NOT FACE UNDUE PROBLEMS BECAUSE OF THE WEATHER

double the average rainfall, with July also bringing flash floods that continue to turn roads into rivers and inundate homes and businesses in parts of the country.

Extended forecasts suggest that while the bouts of heavy rain may abate, London weather could still be wetter than the already-moist average for much of the 2012 Games — testing years-in-the-making transit

Storm Troopers

Outdoor sports could clearly be most affected by prolonged rain. But London Olympic planners, acutely aware of the weather challenges for years, have gone to great lengths to minimize potential disruptions. They've planted special grass and built a filtration system into the equestrian courses, a move that could prevent a repeat of two recent equestrian events in the English countryside canceled because of heavy rains. Officials ordered up a tailor-made "bespoke cover" for the BMX bike track in East London, above, to ensure it keeps dry. Five different sailing routes have been identified to cope with possible weather issues. Five full-time meteorologists will be attached to the Olympic Park, with staffing 24 hours a day. And additional days of competition are being built into several sports—like rowing and tennis—where weather can be an enormous factor. (TWP)

23.6"

Statistically speaking, London doesn't quite live up to its reputation as the ultimate soggy city, with its average annual rainfall of 23.6 inches actually lower than Paris, New York or Washington.
Rather, its rainy rap is earned more from frequently overcast skies that more often drizzle than pour buckets, with its fast-moving island weather tending to push strong storms through the urban area relatively quickly. (TWP) planning and potentially affecting the medal count.

Athletes, experts say, are competing at levels so high that every advantage counts, with inclement weather sometimes throwing even top players off their game.

American high jumper Jesse Williams, the world record holder, for instance, struggled in the rain during Olympic qualifiers, barely making it onto the U.S. team. With a history of not performing his best in precipitation, Williams has opted to skip time with his coach in Manhattan, Kan., where temperatures are topping 100 degrees. Instead, he has shifted much of his training to Eugene, Ore., where the damp, temperate climate more closely mimics the conditions in London.

"He's been challenged by inclement weather before, but he's recognized what he's likely to encounter in London and he's decided to train more in Oregon," said Cliff Rovelto, U.S. high jump coach. "It's just one factor, one that's been at the back of his mind."

Others, meanwhile, are praying for rain. American Khadevis Robinson, competing in the 800 meters, said the wet weather has in the past proved to be a problem for David Rudisha, the Kenyan favorite.

"You know, he's only lost twice in the last couple of years, both times in rain, which, by his own admission, is something he says is challenging for him," Robinson said. "As an athlete, you use this to tell yourself, OK, maybe this gives me an opening, maybe this gives me a chance. Because it's London, and you know it's going to rain."

Singer Frank Ocean lays his feelings bare on 'Channel Orange'

Album Review

When Frank Ocean addressed speculation about his sexuality last week, the declaration on his Tumblr page felt lyrical. "Time would glide," the R&B singer wrote, eloquently transporting us a few summers back to when he met his first love — a man.

Suddenly, Ocean, 24, had become the first mainstream R&B artist to go public about a romance that previous generations would have fiercely fought to conceal.

But Ocean's announcement has

been greeted with a support that's beginning to feel emblematic of the country's changing attitudes about homosexuality.

Ocean's major-label debut, "Channel Orange," shows a sure-footed confidence that took many of his forebears years to summon. Reimagining the melodic sensibilities of Marvin Gaye and Stevie Wonder and the evaporated song structures of D'Angelo, Maxwell and Erykah Badu, he's forging his own brand of neo-neo-soul.

And he's an incredibly gift-

Each song on this album tells a story in high-definition detail, some tales more cryptic than others. That's why "Channel Orange" is best experienced with your eyes closed.

Backstory Behind the Music

Frank Ocean's sexuality has put his name in the headlines, but his talents as a singer and songwriter should not be overlooked. Last year, Ocean released a lovely digital album, "Nostalgia, Ultra"; he's helped pen songs for Justin Bieber, John Legend and Beyonce; he sang the most exquisite hook on Kanye West and Jay-Z's 2011 album "Watch the Throne"; and he's made standout contributions as a member of the rowdy rap collective Odd Future. (TWP/EXPRESS) ed narrator. Each song on this album tells a story in high-definition detail, some tales more cryptic than others. That's why "Channel Orange" is an album best experienced with your eyes closed. Listen carefully and the plot will unfold on your eyelids.

He's at his most revealing with the spartan ballad "Bad Religion." It opens with a church organ and Ocean singing from the backseat of a taxi where he asks the driver to be his "shrink for the hour" in hopes that they can "outrun the demons."

The song's closing couplet offers the album's most confessional moment: "It's a bad religion to be in love with someone who could never love you / And only bad religion could have me feeling the way I do."

It's a paralyzing turn of phrase, but there's no angst in his loneliness — just a somber self-awareness rarely expressed so profoundly in song. CHRIS RICHARDS (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Extra 'Games': The final book in "The Hunger Games" trilogy is coming to the big screen in two parts. Lionsgate Films says "The Hunger Games: Mockingjay, Part 1" will be released Nov. 21, 2014, and "The Hunger Games: Mockingjay, Part 2" will follow on Nov. 20, 2015. The filmmakers are using the template set by two other teen literary franchises, "Harry Potter" and "Twilight," whose final books were split into two films. (AP)

A New Harmony

The Dirty Projectors make magic out of topsy-turvy sounds

Album Review

Dave Longstreth has a voice like cilantro. You'll devour it or gag.

The Dirty Projectors frontman sings in dramatic, gravity-averse curlicues that can make dense lyrics feel light. They can also make Longstreth sound like a bit of a show off. But if those vocal loop-deloops aren't a deal-breaker, it'll be easy to lose yourself in "Swing Lo Magellan," his band's latest bundle of polyrhythmic rock songs.

The opening track, "Offspring Are Blank," pulls back the curtain with a chorus of humming voices and clapping hands as the frontman sings about the proliferation of humanity: "There was a single one/Then there were 10/Ten made a 100/And a hundred million." But before the proceedings get too esoteric, the song explodes with classic rock guitar riffage that may trigger head-banging.

Swing Lo Magellan The Dirty Projectors

It's followed by "About to Die," a delightfully chirpy tune about existential dread. "Look there, the mirror," Longstreth sings during the song's bridge, "A zombie stands staring, vacant and glaring/Pronouncing your name as his own."

The music works against that harsh imagery, with drums that pop like Calgon bubbles and covocalists Amber Coffman and Haley Dekle softly ooh-ooh-ooh-ing in the background, as if being conducted by Phil Spector.

Heavily littered with snippets of studio chatter, "Unto Caesar" spells out the fact that, yes, this topsy-turvy music was made by actual human beings.

But that should already be clear to anyone who has listened to this intimate album's 11 other tracks.

'Top Spot' borrows its formula from a popular HGTV show

Reality

TRAVEL 10:00

The new product-placement series "Top Spot" borrows liberally from the HGTV popular series "House Hunters," as well as from the fairy tale of "Goldilocks and the Three Bears." On each "Spot," would-be vacationers are whisked off to three sumptuous locales and shown the glories of Miami Beach, island resorts or the culture of London. At the end of the show, the lucky players get to choose their favorite destination. Viewers at home can play along and try to guess which resort or destination is deemed just right.

On Travel Channel's "Top Spot," prospective vacationers tour three locales, such as the Hastings House, above, and pick one at the end of the episode for a future trip.

Even Bigger Love

A fascinating peek into the lives of people in relationships with more than one person, "Polyamory: Married & Dating" (11 p.m., Sho) focuses on two "couples." Lindsey, right, and Anthony, left, share a girlfriend, Vanessa, center, who now wants a more formal commitment. Meanwhile, Michael and Kamala have 12 lovers between them — some shared, some not — and they've invited two of them to join their family. (TM)

"Have we gotten so riven by self-hatred in this country that even Kate Upton's body can still be subjected to this nastiest and most personal of public critiques?"

— JENNA SAUERS AT JEZEBEL

.COM reacts to a post on Skinny Gossip.com that insulted the 2012 Sports Illustrated Swimsuit Issue cover model's runway appearance in Miami by saying, among other things, that she walked down the runway "like there's a buffet at the end of it" and called Upton a "little piggie." "Ah, NYC.
In what other major metropolis
can you buy a baby shark on the subway?"

— @JOSHPETRI facetiously reacts to a Gothamist.com post that shows a man selling a live shark that he claimed he caught at Coney Island, according to a reader. "How does one, as a crappy fast food chain known for its Grade Z taco meat, overcome a relatively horrific reputation in the restaurant industry? Pull a ridiculous stunt, videotape it, and set it to some Explosions in the Sky and voila! You come off looking like you've just airlifted medical supplies to needy deployed military servicemen!"

— MARIELLA MOSTHOF AT THEBRAISER.COM did not like Taco Bell's "Operation: Alaska" commercial that features Bethel, Alaska, after the town was fooled by a hoax last week that the chain was opening a restaurant there. Taco Bell decided to send a food truck via helicopter to serve the townspeople.

"Rape jokes aside; Daniel Tosh is an awful comedian."

— @ROSCOW has no love for the comedian and host of Comedy Central's "Tosh.0," who apologized Wednesday for allegedly claiming that rape is a funny subject during an appearance at the Laugh Factory in Hollywood recently. "Jason
Bateman, Ron
Howard, and Mitch Hurwitz
tweeted photos
of themselves in the writer's room so it HAS to be true."

— WHITNEY JEFFERSON AT

BUZZFEED.COM is hoping that the picture of the three men means the "Arrested Development" TV series will begin filming soon.

Horoscope

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You may have trouble pinpointing just what your target will be today, but you know that you have to be accurate in all efforts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You enjoy doing things that bring you a unique kind of satisfaction that is difficult to share. A loved one knows what's important to you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You have only so much time to fulfill a promise made to those who depend on you for much more than mere information. Get to work!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You are likely to discover that what you've been relying on so much in the past isn't really satisfying you these days. It's time for a change.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You don't have to get everything done at once today; pace yourself, and address obstacles one at a time for best results.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

You've waiting a long time for a certain someone to give you what you've most desired — and today is likely to be the day!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You're likely to find a great deal of meaning in even the most seemingly trivial of events and developments.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) It's no good harping on things you cannot change; rather, address those things you know you can influence in a positive way.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) The social scene provides opportunity and danger today, and you must be able to discern the one from the other at every turn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You and a partner may not agree as to the best course of action, but if you keep moving forward, you will surely make progress together.

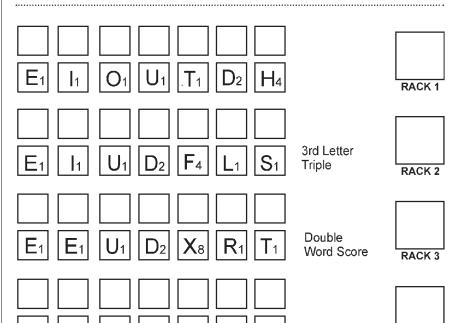

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You may be spending more time alone than usual these days, and a family member expresses concern. You can put his or her mind at ease.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Before doing what must be done, you may have time to do one or two things that are purely recreational — but keep an eye on the clock!

THINGS TO SUE OVER

She Didn't Pay Me: OK. She Gave Me a Headache: No.

Courtney Love's ex-assistant is suing over unpaid wages and claims Love made unethical requests such as instructing her to hire a hacker and falsify legal letters. Jessica Labrie filed the lawsuit in Los Angeles on Tuesday. Labrie claims she was fired after complaining she was owed thousands of dollars, and that she suffered from headaches and insomnia as a result of Love's conduct. (AP)

Miley Cyrus Passes the Celebrity Equivalent Of AP U.S. History

Miley Cyrus' latest tattoo, on her left forearm, is a quote from a 1910 speech President Theodore Roosevelt gave in Paris, Usmagazine.com reported. "So that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who knew neither victory nor defeat," reads the tattoo. Her motivations for the choice are not known. (EXPRESS)

Miley gets extra credit for choosing Teddy over the more accessible FDR.

Victims

A Travesty, Yes. An Emergency, No.

An effort to cancel a strip-club performance by Nadya "Octomom" Suleman has been denied by a Florida judge, who ruled against holding an emergency hearing requested by West Palm Beach's T's Lounge, saying the situation is not an emergency. T's Lounge was trying to stop Suleman from appearing at a competing club. (AP)

The Comeback Continues

The Idol" producer Nigel Lythgoe has said that he wants Charlie Sheen to join the judging panel for Season 12. TMZ talked to Sheen, who said he would love to join "Idol" so long as FX, the network on which his sitcom "Anger Management" airs, signs off and "if 'Idol' matches 20 percent of my weekly salary for Autism Speaks, JDRF and the Boys and Girls Club." (EXPRESS)

ANTI-CLIMATIC Not a Diva, Just Hungry

Britney Spears was not the only "X Factor" judge to walk away from a bad audition Monday. A man, in drag, was performing Spears' "Crazy." Spears says she left at the behest of fellow judge Demi Lovato: "I was following her. ... She was like, 'Let's go!' And I was like, 'OK.' It was our dinner break, anyway." (EXPRESS)

THE DAILY REGURGITATION

The Plot Against Tom

Katie Holmes and fellow Tom Cruise ex-wife Nicole Kidman are secretly friends, with Kidman giving Holmes advice on how to leave her marriage, Usmagazine.com reported. Holmes had a secret cellphone she used to strategize about the divorce with her lawyers and family, the Los Angeles Times reported. The "still-stunned" Cruise "was a happy man and thought he had a happy life," an unnamed source told People.com. (EXPRESS)
